

The History of Translation

Translation is the communication of the meaning of a source language text by means of an equivalent target language text. The English language draws a terminological distinction between translating and interpreting.

Because of the laboriousness of the translation process, since the 1940s efforts have been made to automate translation or to mechanically aid the human translator. More recently, the rise of the Internet has fostered a world-wide market.